MRS. THAW IS TO BE MARRIED AGAIN TO-NIGHT

Thaw a Month Ago.

Died and Left Him a Great Fortune.

He was not sure about the address, but learned that Mrs. T.jaw had a friend, a street corridor. He has been through the corridor. He has been through an experience sufficient to crush a man, yet at there is a breath lett in him.

Fatrick went to Sing Sing long ago, jauntily and confident that he would win out on appeal. His energetic nature asserted itself in the train on the way up. He berrowed a sheet of paper with him, and on this wrote his first appeal. Borrowing a fountain pen, he iters step he took toward the freedom he was so condent of getting, but which court after court has refused him.

It has been a fight unequalled in the history of crime and criminals in this State, and sometimes it seems almost a pity that it should have been a losing fight. But the courts have held, and they are inexorable, that the death of William Marsh Rice must be atoned for and Patrick must die.

Patrick, bowever, still has hopes of oscaping the death penalty, and is preparing to appeal to the United States COUNTS. He hopes the appeal will act as a stay.
